

Bob goes to Greenland.

Bob didn't know what to do. Where should he go on holiday? Should he go to Nuneaton, where the people eating giants dared not go? Should he go Turkey to, where every lunch time they eat turkey? Should he go to Georgia, where everyone is called Georgia? Or should he go to Hungary, where everyone starves? In the end Bob decided to go to Greenland.

When Bob got of the green plane he looked around to see a green sky, green houses and green people wearing green clothes. The only thing that wasn't green were the trees (they were blue.) When Bob got to the green hotel he went over to the green receptionist and asked her for a room. She sent him to room 82 which was at the end of the last green corridor at the top green level. It took him ages to get there. When Bob finally got to his green room he lay down on his green double bed and fell asleep straight away.

When Bob woke up it was morning and his stomach was rumbling so he unpacked his suitcase, got dressed then walked down the green corridor, down the green steps into the green breakfast buffet room. A lady showed him to his green seat then after being served his green tea he got up and made his way over to the buffet. It was amazing! Everything was green! Bob decided to have the green apple cereal with green grape muffins and to finish off with he had boiled spinach. Bob enjoyed his breakfast very much.

After breakfast Bob went up to his room grabbed his coat and on the green phone he called a taxi service to pick him up in five minutes. When the green taxi arrived Bob got in, sat down then told the driver he wanted to go to the green green gardens. It took just over half an hour to get there. Bob paid the driver then headed out into the lush green gardens.

In the centre of it all was a pond. The pond was surrounded with stepping-stones which led into the five different parts of the garden. The whole thing was shaped like a large flower. The first part was a flower bed with lots of buzzing bees and butterflies. The second part was a compost heap surrounded by log piles. The third part was a garden shed which Bob presumed to be full of compost for the flowers or feed for the bird feeders. The forth part was just trees. Trees everywhere. The final part was a play park for the little children, it was totally green.

Bob sat down on one of the many benches and breathed the fresh air whilst gazing into the distance. When suddenly he heard a splash. He looked at the pond and saw a helpless four year old girl splashing and screaming. The mother had just noticed what had happened to her beautiful baby girl and called for help. Bob rushed over to attend their aid. He jumped into the pond, grabbed the little girl just before her head was about to descend under the icy water. Bob, feeling quite the hero, swam over to the bank and climbed out without any difficulty at all. He handed the screaming child back over to her mother who was crying with thanks. Five minutes later an ambulance arrived, the doctors checked Bob and the little girl over just to make sure they were ok. After this event Bob decided to go back to the hotel and chose to relax during his remaining day in Greenland.

It was time for Bob to leave Greenland, it had been a good holiday but it was now time to return to his homeland (which wasn't quite as strange.) When Bob got of the normal plane he got into a normal taxi and went back to his normal home. It had been a exhausting journey so he decided to go straight to bed. He fell asleep in seconds.

The end.
