

Circa are a group of seven contemporary circus dancers who have been performing together since 2006, originating from Brisbane, Australia. They took to the stage at The City Hall with a spellbinding, sensational and near flawless performance. They created a jaw biting experience as the audience (including myself), were on the edge of their seats and held their breath as the performers were launched effortlessly through the air from one pair of strong arms to another, landing with such grace and delicacy. In a few places the performance lacked a sense of direction but was soon followed by another outstanding routine.

The act is not suited to the interests of those whom are of a very young age because although it did not have a story, they would not be able to appreciate the pure beauty and passion of the act. I would recommend it however to anyone who enjoys acrobatics or is looking for something different from the usual performances. Overall, I had a very entertaining evening.
