

International arts festival: Echoa review

By Jack Reeve

Echoa is a dance/music performance. The group - made up of 3 men and 1 woman – make music out of almost anything and can dance and act to all of their music.

Echoa is very good. The whole performance has been very well rehearsed, is very creative and very clever in how they make the music out of anything they can. They make different types of music and in places can be really funny. They make it really colourful and all the music tells a different story. During the performance some of them dance while the others make the music. The dancing is mainly contemporary dance and it becomes very repetitive throughout the performance.

In conclusion I think this performance is very creative, clever and in places quite funny and I think this is suitable and appropriate for the whole family and you will all love it.
