

Hamlet – 28th May

Hamlet – containing one of Shakespeare’s most well-known quotes – “To be or not to be, that is the question” and “The lady doth protest too much”; was performed over three days from Friday the 27th to Sunday the 29th at Trafalgar Park in Downtown.

It was an amazing performance with the actor’s voices reaching even the back row (where I was sitting) as it sounded as if they were spoken right next to me. It amazes me how the actors – especially Hamlet (Joshua McGuire) can memorise their whole script and the perform it with such strong emotions whilst being fluid and in control. They made no mistakes, not even a stutter.

The performance was played on a small stage which was really clever. At first I was confused as to where the actors kept disappearing to but then I realised that the stage was cleverly designed to look all together but was really it had sides that people could walk through. It was a very clever design as I had no idea how they were getting around.

It was a great performance and I really enjoyed it. The small stage was really effective and the actors were great. I would definitely see it again.
