

Mum and Dad divorcing

This is a moment that changed my life. One morning when I was in the garden, before lunch, my Mum called me in from the kitchen window that overlooks the garden. She told us to sit down I was rather excited because when we all have a chat it's sometimes good.

Mum had a worried look on her face, and then she said "Boys." Because of the look on her face I guessed it, so I said it "You're going to divorce?"

"Yes." She said. We held hands and cried. After that I wasn't very happy at school for a while. Going back to the chat I had a little bit of a clue because they hadn't been very happy over Christmas so that gave it away a little more along with the look on Mums face.

Mum and Dad are not sure where they are going to live. Mum said that she would live somewhere quite local, around Winchester, in the middle of the city. Dad is not sure where he's going to live. Mum likes going to Winchester cathedral so that's why she wants to live around the middle.

My brother was quite upset as well and he will be going to a local secondary school called Henry Beaufort. Talking about schools I go to Salisbury Cathedral School, I was intending to stay there until the end of year eight, but as they're divorcing I only have until the end of year six. I'm really really upset about that! I board so I really miss them so much. Even though I miss them all, Mum, Dad and Ben who is my brother. I like boarding.

Looking on the brighter side of Mum and Dad divorcing, they would be happier, that's the good thing. Mum said we would try and get the court as little involved as possible.

For future plans were not sure what school I'm going to. It's going to be a school in Winchester.

My Dad works as a deputy agent for the Bank of England. He travels around the south of England, so that might explain why he hasn't decided where he's going to live. Mum isn't sure whether she's going to keep her job or try to find a new one to earn more money. Our house will go on the market after they've divorced so they'll still be living together until they've divorced. Sometimes after upper Mum and Dad want the kitchen to themselves for a bit. Mum has a different room to Dad, she's had it for quite a long time. I think she likes having her own room because she has her own space to do what ever she wants. Our future plans aren't quite straight yet, but roughly we know. My life will certainly change but it will work out fine.
